"Strikes occur from time to time at individual mines by reason of local causes," the letter said. "They are always an economic loss. They are usually a breach of contract on the part of the miners.

"There can be no doubt that the fundamental cause of such local strikes, as well as strikes of a nation-wide character like those of 1919 and 1922, is the despotic control of approximately 69 per cent of the mine labor of the United States and Canada by a single organization, with power to stop at will the production and movement in interstate commerce of approximately 60 per cent of the normal coal output of the country. In the opinion of this committee, the continuation, to say nothing of any further extension, of the sutceratic power of the United Mine Workers of America would be calamitous to the general welfare of the country."

containing the decision the charman said that conviction ought to be impossible unless the annoyance could be proved by evidence. Saying that he thought it would be necessary some day to close Hyde Park at night, the chairman added there was no charge against the police except that they drew inferences they were not entitled of draw.

The case against Sir Almeric was true tried by Magistrate Mead, who is your of the oldest on the London bench, and to-day's reversal adds another to a long list from his court rising out of incidents in Hyde Park. Earlier in the year these proceedings caused an outburst of criticism, which re-echoed in the House of Commons, it being directed mainly to the fact that in nearly all cases the evidence was the unapported testimony of the police.
